GEN. MEADE'S STATUE.

Unvailed Last Week in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

On Tuesday, Oct. 18, a superb equestrian statue of Gen. George Gordon Meade was unvailed in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia. The weather was delightful. There was a little spurt of rain in the morning which was just enough to lay the dust and make pleasant marching for the soldiers and ex-soldiers who took part in the parade which preceded the ceremonies in the park. The procession was started at 1:30 p. m., and was under command of Col. James C. Biddle, who was a member of In addition to the First Brigade, National Guard, there were in the line Grand Army Posts from the Departments of Penusylvania, New York, New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, the Pennsylvania Commandery of the Loyal Legion, the Pennsylvania Reserve Association, Union Veterans' League, Sons of Veterans, Association, which regiment Gen, Meade commanded in the early part of the war. All along were greeted with cheers, and when the head of the column reached the site of the memorial in the park the crowd on the ground

NUMBERED FULLY 20,000. A stand for the accommodation of the speakers had been erected close to the memorial, and within the inclosure were assembled the members of Gen. Meade's immediate family and many distinguished military and civil guests. The memorial, which is a bronze equestrian statue, is the work of the sculptor A. M. Calder, It is of heroic size, and is mounted on a pedestal of rough granite about 20 feet in hight. The statue represents Gen. Meade reining in his horse sharply on the slope of a hill, while, hat in hand, he is returning a salute. The design is a spirited one, and the execution all that could be desired. The likeness is striking. The statue was east by Henry Bonnard, of New York. The project of the memorial was inaugurated in 1872, but it was not until 1884 that the money necessary to complete it-$30,-000-was raised.

The ceremonies to-day were exceedingly simde. After the guests had arrived Mayor Edwin H. Fitler, who presided, promptly at 3 o'clock introduced the Right Rev. Cortlandt Whitehead, D. D., Bishop of Pittsburg, who delivered an invocation and prayer. The Mayor himself followed in a brief address, and then introduced the Hon. Benjamin H. Brewster, ex-Attorney-General of the United States, who, on behalf of the Fairmount Park Art Association, presented the statue to the Commissioners of the Park, and it was received by the Hon. George H. Boker, ex-United States Minister to Constantinople, President of the Commission. The monument was an valled at this stage of the ceremonies by Musters George Gordon Meade and George Gordon Meade Large, grandsons of the General,

AMID TUMULTUOUS CHEERING. Mayor Fitler then introduced the orator of the day, Maj.-Gen. John Gibbon, United States Army, who began his address by referring to his first meeting with Pennsylvania's great soldier in the everglades of Florida during the Seminote war, and said that up to the beginning of the war Meade had never commanded even a commilitary duties totally unused personally to active command, and depended for success upon the basis of his military education and his good judgment and tact in governing men. Although, therefore, an officer in the Regular Army, Gen. Meade was essentially a volunteer, commanding volunteers. It was frequently noted during the war and afterward how much of the renown gained by volunteer organizations could be traced lack to the right direction given to their efforts by the sound judgment, good hard comcommanders who first took them in charge. For these qualities Meade

EARLY BECAME DISTINGUISHED, and his efforts in drilling his command, disciplining and gaining the confidence of his men were fully exemplified in the first battles they went into. In speaking of the second battle of Bull Run, Gen. Gibbon said :

The problem was how and in what time to get the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Virginia together in front of Washington before Lee could bring superior forces to bear upon the latter army. I touch upon this matter merely that I may refer to a conversation held with Meade at the time our recently returned to his command and informed me that he had just held a conversation with the army commander, Gen. Pope, during which Mende asked him the question; "What are you doing out here? You should be falling back toward Washington," is a well-known fact that the authorities in Washington sent Pope orders to hold his ground in advanced positions at the front. Mark the fact that while an obscure brigade commander the future communder of the Army of the Potomac had wellmuch underrated subject in military operations-

After referring to Gen. J. F. Reynolds's rethe Potemac unless a liberty of action were guaranteed to him considerably beyond what sound utilitary principles, nor bestow high command unhampered with conditions by the recipient, and hence a few months later, when the necessity for relieving Hooker became imperative, Meade received no warning from the Government, and things prepared by the ladies, and there was was allowed no option in the matter. He was enough and to spare after the long tables had of the State of New York and the other the been twice filled, and a button-hole bouquet of arms of the city of Brooklyn. The was to be placed in arrest. The conclusion to pletely unexpected to him was the order placing him in command of the army. The foundation for his conclusion, when awakened to find himself confronted by Col. Hardie, dates back to the battle of Chancehorsville, barely two months before. After the retreat Hooker insisted that Meade had counseled it, and that he had so reported to Washington. Is it may wonder that bleade, waked out of a sound sleep at midwight and confronted with sentation by the society of a watch to the re-Department, should have jumped to the conclusion that the order was one placing him in arrest rather than one giving him command of the army?

HALLECK AND MEADE. Speaking of the telegram from Gen. Halleck to Meade after the battle of Gettysburg, expressing disappointment that Lee had not been captured and his army destroyed, Gen. Gibbou

It is worth no man's while to attempt to defend Gen. Meade from a charge which came very near being made the pretext for depriving him of the command of the army. Those who knew the character of the man will not hesitate to accept as conclusive his words before the Committee on the Conlah, sah. De li'bil'ties wah only seventy-fi' duct of the War, and repeated in other places with the same carnestness: "I deny," he says, "under the full solemnity and sanctity of my oath, and in the firm conviction that the day will come when the secrets of all men shall be known-I utterly deny ever having intended, or thought for one instant to withdraw that army, unless the military con tingencles which the future should develop during the course of the day might render it a matter of necessity that the army should be withdrawn."

Gen. Gibbon emphatically denied that Gen. Meade had any intention of retreating from the field of Gettysburg on the morning of July 2, or at any time during the battle. He said,

As one of the numerous controversies which have arisen since the battle of Gettysburg is in regard to the powers bestowed upon Gen. Hanek on that occasion, a simple quotation from Meade's letter of instruction, dated 1:16 p. m., July 1, ought to be sufficient to settle the ques that you proceed to the front, and by virtue of this order, in case of the truth of Gen. Reynolds's death, you assume command of the corps there assembled, viz, the Eleventh, First, and Third, at Emmittsburg." Hancock, offcourse, He concluded his oration with an eloquent tribute to Gen. Meade's BRAVERY AND DISTINGUISHED SERVICES as a soldier, his high-toned, honorable character as a man, and his virtue and integrity as a citizen of the Republic. The following members of Gen. Meade's family assisted in the ceremonies: Geo. G. Meade, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Meade, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Large, Mrs. Margaret Meade, Miss Henrietta Meade, George G. M. Large, Robert Large, John B. Beaver, of Pennsylvania, and staff; Gov. Green, of New Jersey, and staff; Gen. Fitz-John Porter; Gen. Wm. B. Franklin, of Hartford, Conn.; and the Hon. John C. Ropes, of Boston; Admiral T. A. EVENING RECEPTION. As a pleasant wind-up to the day and occasion a reception was given at night to the visiting officers of the Army and Navy in the banquet room, which was draped with flags, recalled to many his erect figure and thoughtful face, shaded with a broad, soft-felt hat, so familiar to frequenters of the League. Col. Wiedersbeim, as Chairman of the Reception Committee, gave to the occasion his large and expert experience, and not only introduced most of the leading guests to each other when not already acquainted, but practically managed the whole affair. As the reception was given by the Fairmount Park Art Association, Joel J. Baily, its Vice-President, who is also Chairman of the Meade Memorial Committee, led the reception group and occupied the center in the library, where it was held, with Gov. Beaver on his right and Mayor Fitler on his left. Gen. Hartranft and several other officers associated with Gen. Meade at Gettysburg were in the same group.

ABROAD. On Sunday there were a number of open-air meetings of workingmen and Socialists throughout London, but there were no serious conflicts with the police. The meeting in Trafalgar Square attracted the most attention, as the po-lice have forbidden meetings at this place, and it was thought there would be a conflict. Some four or five thousand men gathered, but were Gen. John Newton, of New York city; Gen. James B. Fry; Gen. D. M. Gregg; Gen. L. A. Grant, of Minneapolis; Gen. J. C. A delegation of nearly 1,000 left Jersey City to witness the ceremonies. Nearly 250 members of the regiment and 100 war veterans met at the armory, and, carrying the tattered flags of the regiment, marched from the arsenal in North Portland avenue to the foot of Fulton street, whence they were Mayor Whitney, ex-Mayor Seth Low, Maj. C. A. Richardson, Controller Livingston, District Attorney Ridgway, Sheriff Faley, who served in the regiment during the war; United States District Attorney Wilbur, City Auditor Rutan, several members of the Board of Aldermen and Supervisors, and other City and County officials accompanied the delegation.

The monument was received on behalf of the State of New York by Maj. Richardson, and the oration was delivered by ex-Mayor Low. The monument is of white granite. It consists of a pedestal eight feet high and the statue of a 14th regiment private loading his musket. There are two circular bronze medallions on taken by the 14th. Gen. E. B. Fowler, who headed the veteran delegation, was present when the regiment was organized in 1847, and was Lieutenant-Colonel at the outbreak of the war. He commanded the regiment after the first battle of Bull Run until the close of the war.

William Langdon, a veteran of the 14th, while marching with his comrades to the ferry was taken sick in Fulton street, near Clarke, and dropped from the ranks. He was removed in an ambulance to the Adams street police station, where he died in a few moments.

Certain abbreviations are generally supposed to stand for an honorable title or degree, but in this country there are sometimes amusing improvisations on these seeming abbreviated titles, as is illustrated in the following anecdote. "Ah!" said an Englishman, who chanced to be stopping in California for the first time, "this is a strange country. There are all sorts of people here, and it shows how wild and marked are the vicissitudes of fate."

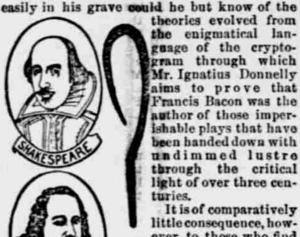

"Yes," said the Californian, "people rise and fall here. I knew an English baronet who drove a hack." "Dear me! You don't tell me!" "Yes, and I know a German baron who keeps a bootblack stand." "It's incredible! But look up there. That is the most curious thing I ever saw." He pointed to a sign over an oyster-house which bore the legend; "Peter Simple, F. R. S.," and underneath, "Oysters."

"Bless my soul! bless my soul! A Fellow of the Royal Society keeping an oyster-saloon!" "Well, no; that's hardly so strange. 'F. R. S.' doesn't mean Fellow of the Royal Society; it means 'fried, roasted and stewed.'"
